SECTION C: COMPREHENSION (10 MARKS)

Read the passage below and answer the questions that follow. Use complete sentences and as far as possible your own words.

It is no longer a secret to anybody that indiscipline prevails in our colleges and high schools and especially those in urban centres. This situation has been preoccupying the minds of teachers, parents and government authorities. The effects of this indiscipline are drug abuse, vandalism, moral depravity and alarming falling standards.

Discipline can be defined as training, especially of mind and character, to produce self-control, habits of obedience, etc. Each college has internal rules and regulations and each has an administrative staff comprising senior discipline masters, wardens and boarding masters who are specifically charged with the maintenance of order and discipline, yet, the rate of juvenile delinquency in our colleges is alarming.

Many people think indiscipline is a device to dissuade or repress those who try to contravene rules and regulations. This explains why most discipline masters simply look for recalcitrant students and mete out punishment as provided for in college rules and regulations. The risk of this repressive approach to discipline is that it not only creates in the students a sentiment of fear, hostility or rebellion against college authorities, but also imposes a forceful discipline on students. Some take advantage of any free occasion to disguise and express their anger to college authorities.

Poor working conditions of teachers and students are likely to provoke discontent and disorder. For example, the uncontrolled enrolment of children in a class, the poor programming of subjects in a school day, the lack of didactic materials, the poor location of some colleges which are often near markets, football fields, bars, etc.

The incompetence and irresponsibility of some teachers is also a source of indiscipline amongst students. Some teachers do not take enough pains to prepare their lesson notes in order to render the subject captivating and interesting to students. This, sometimes, leads the teacher to make some monumental errors that expose him/her to criticisms of students.

Parents are also to blame for the indiscipline of their children. Most of them do not perform their duties as initial teachers of their very children. Abandoned to themselves, these children are free to do whatever they like. Because of their social status, certain parents even go as far as making their children believe that they cannot be punished.

Some "parallel schools" hold in corridors and recreational grounds. In such schools, some licentious students mislead their friends who are of good upbringing. Under such circumstances, principals of institutions of learning should revise their strategy and consider discipline and good conduct as an indispensable component of objectives assigned to their schools. Children have to be helped in a teaching and learning process.
